More Pluck than Wind.

A correspondent of the New York World, commenting upon the recent fiasco of the Atlanta crew in England, says: "Their ridiculous failure to represent American muscle at the 'International Rowing Match' has disgusted everybody. What in the world, people say, did they take such immense pains to get awfully beaten for? No one, except those who lost their bets, cares a peg for the Atlantas in the abstract; but the idea of an American crew deliberately crossing the broad Atlantic, hearding the British lion in his den, and then allowing themselves to be ignominiously beaten, in a trial of strength and wind, by the base representative of an EFFETE monarchy, is too harrowing—in fact, to use another agricultural figure, in compliment to the rustic Chappaquan, it is too subsoil plowing—for peaceful contemplation. As Margery Fleming would say, 'It is what human nature itself can't endure.' How much easier for the Atlantas to have stayed quietly at home, and sworn, with that breath they seem to have so wofully lost in the race, that they could whip the cockneys out of their boots if they'd only a mind to try. But that inestimable privilege they have forfeited by bringing the matter to an open test. Falstaff was right—'Discretion is the better part of valor' in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred. Before they try conclusions with the sons of 'perdidious Albion' again, our boys should make sure of their wind and muscle, as well as their pluck, change their system of 'quick stroke' rowing—which is good for a 'start,' but not for long and hard pulling—and then, when giving or accepting a challenge they may have some reason to hope for success. As it is, their brave promise and poor performance is but a 'delusion and a snare' to confiding sportsmen green enough to bet on the success of a crew trained according to the unphilosophical 'American system.'"

Boston wants an avenue 200 feet wide.

Life in Ireland.

An American is surprised, says a correspondent of the Christain Register, to see the conditions of life as fair as they are here in Ireland. The squalor of the low Irish is not so pronounced in Dublin and its environs as in the Irish quarters of Boston or New York.
People are not so huddled. As the cabins are but one story high, the pigs cannot be kept in the attic. On Sunday the poor people are quite as well dressed. In regard to these things the aspects of Irish life have greatly improved during the last half century. So many have emigrated that there is a better chance for those that remain. A curious law is in force here by which all the living must be married, and all the dead buried, before twelve o'clock noon.
As in England, marriages must be in church or chapel. There are no marriages at home. And if one goes to the great cemeteries in the vicinity of Dublin, as the hour of noon approaches, he will see funerals coming, some of them in hot haste lest the noon-bell should strike, the gates be shut, and the burial have to be deferred to the next day. The processions are not allowed to enter the cemetery; but the bodies are borne in, and the friends may follow on foot.
If the deceased be a Catholic, the priests says a few words over the coffin just inside the gate, and then it is borne on very much as a matter of business. The irreverent and unceremonious way in which dead people, especially if they die in poverty, are put into the ground here is amazing. One notices, too, that the priests are laid with their heads in the direction opposite to the heads of the people, so that in the resurrection at the last day when they rise out of the dust they will stand face to face with the members of their congregation. I noticed one grave in which were buried seven Jesuit fathers one upon another, and could not but imagine what a deal of good temper and gracious deference to each other would be needed at the last trumpet to prevent discord and scrambling out in some selfish, uncomfortable and awkwardly irritating way. But these are great mysteries, and the carnal reason may not pry into them. The church knows that the seven fathers will come out of it all right at last, and that is enough.

A HAPPY HOME.—"Six things" says Hamilton, "are requisite to create a 'home.' Integrity must be the architect, tidiness the upholsterer, it must be warmed by affection, and lighted up with cheerfulness, and industry must be the ventilation, renewing the atmosphere and bringing in fresh salubrity day by day; while over all, as a protecting glory and canopy, nothing will suffice except the blessing of God."

INDIAN DEPREDACTIONS.

By a recent Act of Congress, a copy of which is in my possession, a more efficient mode has been provided for the collection of claims against the Government for depredations committed by the Indians.

Having superior facilities for the prosecution of such claims, and much actual experience in the business, I can, with some confidence, say to my fellow-citizens who have suffered loss of property by these lawless tribes, that where the proof is ample, there is no good reason why each claim should not be paid. Within a very short time the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Department named in the Act of Congress referred to, will reach me, when I shall be ready to prosecute any claim that may be placed in my hands for that purpose.
